

Negative Space: The Earth Tone Mysteries

How well do any of us know ourselves, let alone each other? That was the question Detective Turner asked Emily Clark, after his police officers discovered a cache of weapons hidden in her home by her late husband. Not long after informing a colleague that a prototype for a sophisticated weapon was safe in the hands of his wife, John Clarke was murdered in cold blood. Having always played his cards close to his chest, the precise location of the prototype was the one crucial piece of information he had neglected to pass on to his wife. A year later, information about the weapon has reopened the investigation, and thanks to an informant, the police now know that the weapon promises to hold significant advancements in close range weaponry. Moreover, they are also aware that Mrs. Clarke is the only person with access to it, despite her lack of knowledge that such a weapon exists. With time of the essence, law enforcement officers on two continents scramble to protect Emily and find the prototype before it falls into the wrong hands. In an effort to protect her family, Detective Turner insists that she continue with her plans for a month-long painting trip in Tuscany. Emily Clarke, who until now has led a sheltered existence as the daughter of a small town clergymen, suddenly finds herself the centre of unwanted attention. The life she once knew is now nothing more than a distant memory. Was John involved in something nefarious or was he indeed the man she fell in love with? As Emily tries to unravel the true identity of her late husband, she must use all her wits and capabilities if she is to evade the threat that awaits her. With an unknown, ruthless enemy waiting to interrogate her, she must discover her own ingenuity if she is to survive.
