

The Mouse in the Mountain

Doan is a detective and Carstairs his enormous canine companion (dont call him a pet), and in this first hard-boiled adventure they travel to Mexico, along with an heiress, a revolutionary, an artist, and more than a few mysteries.  Chapter 1 WHEN DOAN AND CARSTAIRS CAME down the wide stairway and walked across the pink-tiled floor that was the pride and joy of the Hotel Azteca, the guests in the lobby stopped whatever they were doing to pass the time away and stared open-mouthed. Doan was not such-a-much, but Carstairs usually had this effect on people, and he left a whispering, wondering wake behind him as he stalked across to the glassed side doors and waited with haughty dignity while Doan opened one of the doors. He ambled through it ahead of Doan into the incredibly bright sunlight on the terrace. Doan halted and drew in a deep breath of air that felt clean and dry and thinly exhilarating. He stared all around him with frank appreciation. He was short and a little on the plump side, and he had a chubby, pink face and a smile as innocent and appealing as a babys. He looked like a very nice, pleasant sort of person, and on rare occasions he was. He was wearing a white suit and a wide-brimmed Panama hat and white crepe-soled shoes. Breathe some of this air, Carstairs, he ordered. Its wonderful. This is ideal Mexican weather. Carstairs yawned in an elaborately bored way. Carstairs was a fawn-colored Great Dane. Standing on four legs, his back came up to Doans chest. He never did tricks. He considered them beneath him. But had he ever done one that involved standing on his hind feet, his head would have hit a level far above Doans. Carstairs was so big he could hardly be called a dog. He was a sort of new species. A girl came very quickly out of the door behind Doan and said Uh! in a startled gasp when she saw Carstairs looming in front of her. Carstairs didnt move out of her way. He turned lazily to stare at her. So did Doan. She was a small girl, and she looked slightly underfed. She had very wide, very clear blue eyes. They were nice eyes. Nothing startling, but adequate. Her hair was brown and smooth under a white turban, and she wore a white sports dress and a white jacket and white openwork sandals. She had a clear, smooth skin, and she blushed easily. She was doing it now. Im sorry, she said breathlessly. He--he frightened me. He frightens me, too, sometimes. said Doan. Whats your name? The girl looked at him uncertainly. My name? Its Janet Martin. Mines Doan, said Doan. Im a detective. A--a detective? Janet Martin repeated, fumbling a little over the word. You dont look like one. Of course not, Doan told her. Im in disguise. Im pretending Im a tourist. Oh, said Janet, still uncertain. But--do you go around telling everybody about it? Certainly, said Doan. My disguise is so perfect no one would know I was a detective if I didnt tell them, so naturally I do. Oh, said Janet. I see. She looked at Carstairs. Hes beautiful. I mean, not beautiful but--but magnificent. Does he bite? Quite often, Doan admitted. May I pet him? Doan looked at Carstairs inquiringly. May she? Carstairs studied Janet for a moment and then came one step closer to her and lowered his head regally. Janet patted his broad brow. Dont scratch his ears, Doan warned. He detests that.
