Its January, 1945. The Normandy invasion has failed, Stalingrad has fallen, the Allies are halted in Italy. Fighter pilot and American intelligence analyst Major Jack Nalley discovers several horrifying facts Germany has developed a new weapon of incalculable power, and is near to completing a two-stage rocket that can span the Atlantic and deliver devastating atomic destruction to Americas east coast. Even more discouraging, Nazi espionage activity in England is savagely eliminating analysts like himself, making him an assassination target the more he learns. Meanwhile, his German counterpart is being trained to fly the second stage of the first intercontinental missile, targeted at Washington, DC. Their meeting in the embattled sky above Germany will affect the lives of millions. Based on weaponry development that actually occurred near the wars end, this novel speculates on the very frightening potential for a much different, much darker ending to the Second World War.
