

The Most Important Corporate Law Lessons for CEOs

Authored by Zachary E. Redman, Associate for Snell & Wilmer L.L.P. The conduct of corporate directors and officers is often subject to enhanced judicial scrutiny in transactions involving a change in control. Such scrutiny invariably focuses on how directors and officers discharge their respective fiduciary obligations. This chapter focuses on those obligations in the change in control setting, with a particular emphasis on the role of the CEO in relation to the board of directors, shareholders, other corporate constituencies and stakeholders in the deal making process. This chapter deviates from the conventional approach taken by other commentators and treatises on the subject matter of mergers and acquisitions. First, this chapter focuses on the role of the CEO and his or her management team rather than the directors. The conventional focus on the board is logical. The board is responsible for the management of the corporations affairs and business, including the supervision and oversight of the corporate managers. The CEO, moreover, as the central, dominant corporate actor often also serves as a director. By taking an officer-focused approach, this chapter highlights the constructive steps the CEO may take in his or her capacity as the chief advisor to the board and the corporate actor best situated to take action that will lead to positive corporate performance and outcomes that will maximize benefits accruing to shareholders. Second, although Delaware law features prominently in the articulation of the applicable standards (as any person familiar with Delaware law and practice will easily recognize), this chapter will discuss the issues in terms of general principles rather than focusing on the technical aspects of the relevant case law and statutes.
