

Death At St James's Palace

Ottakars Book of the Month, August 2003
1761, London. The famous magistrate John Fielding is to be honoured with a knighthood. He is one of several important members of the community who gather at St James's Palace for the investiture. As the invited audience eagerly crane for a first glimpse of the new Queen - widely rumoured to be the ugliest the country has ever seen - a terrible accident occurs, nobleman George Goward tumbles down the great staircase to his death. Of all those assembled, not one person saw him begin to fall. Even those standing closest had their eyes fixed on the royal entrance. Only one person witnessed anything untoward - John Fielding, a blind man. A whispered sentence, an exhalation of breath - these are the only clues available to suggest the fall was no accident. Apothecary John Rawlings, accompanying his friend Fielding to the ceremony, sets out to investigate. The Queen of the Georgian historical mystery THE TIMES
