

Polarized

The year is 2112. America is on the brink of war with itself. Fifty years before, the rift between the liberals and the conservatives came to a boiling point, resulting in the Great Race Riot. Cities burned across the country. People of different races and ethnicities feared for their lives and sought refuge with their own kind. Decades after the turmoil, the nation broke up into four racial groups in separate regions: the Asians in the Northwest, the Hispanics in the Southwest, the Afro-Americans in the Midwest, the Northeast and the South, and the Anglo-Americans (whites) in the rest of the land. Through a succession of inept governments in Washington, the country deteriorated further. Laws aimed to protect the freedom and security of the country were seldom enforced: the Civil Rights Act, the FOIA, Immigration and, above all, the First Amendment. Offenders, no less than elected officials consistently got away violating these laws with impunity. Control of the media for years now had been disguised by the puppet press in Washington. The result was a news blackout the country was made to believe did not exist. But an Alliance of a few true Americans knew better. This group, leaders representing their states, grew in number and ultimately founded the Federation of American Independent Republics. In a matter of weeks, sixteen states seceded from the Union. In March of 2112, the Federation proclaimed itself a new sovereign country and declared its Independence from the United States. That same day, the newly organized Federation Defense Forces, mobilized weeks before, seized and took command of major U.S. bases in several Republics. Thus began the second American Civil War.
