

The Pizza House Crash

One and, two and, three and FORGET THE KEY, the green letters said. One and, two and, three and FORGET THE KEY. One and, two and, three and FORGET THE KEY. It was mesmerising even at that speed. A message that shouldn't have been in a pizza-house computer had resulted in the death of technology journalist Georgina Powers' cousin; but if a similar virus had been had been insinuated into one of the biggest and most complex financial systems in the world, that meant a killing of a different kind. London in the late 1980s and the Big Bang in the City is at the cutting edge of the computing and information revolution and where there are stocks to be traded and money to be made, there are also thieves waiting to employ the latest technology. Georgina Powers brilliant with computers but terrible with men soon realises that the source of the virus is very dangerously close to home.
