

A Half Remembered Life (The Lakeland Murders Book 9)

In the ninth book in J J Salkelds best-selling Lakeland Murders series detective Andy Hall is drawn onto some treacherous ground. Could the apparently accidental death of an environmental activist at St. Bees years before have been a cunningly conceived murder, involving both undercover police officers and a subsequent cover-up? And could Halls chief suspect in the case really be a charming, over-achieving sociopath? Aided and abetted by DS Ian Mann (suspended) Andy Hall needs to be absolutely sure that hes right, because his wife and best friends careers, and maybe even his familys safety, are all at stake. As always the former DCS in Cumbria Constabulary has endless ideas and theories to offer, but as to hard evidence? Well, thats quite a different matter... Readers love J J Salkelds characters and their journeys, not only around Englands lovely Lake District, but through their working and family lives: Salkeld opens up the reality of modern policing... yet manages to weave fact, fiction, folklore, humour and reality into his novels totally seamlessly and still retain his ultimate goal... a really damned good read. JJ Salkeld has to be one of the best writers of our times. I particularly enjoy the evolution of the characters throughout the series and am always awaiting the next book to see what happens with their lives next. Highly recommended. When can I get number nine? I am extremely pleased that Andy Hall did not get put out to pasture.
