

The purpose of this book is to explore what really happens when you are compelled to interact with a criminal justice system that might not be as fair as you assume. The statutes and case law referred to in this book are based on California law. Though there are numerous nuances and variations from state to state, the essence and the practices explored here are more or less standard procedure throughout most of the United States. What do you do when you are arrested or detained, or when a cop knocks on your door, or when an officer asks for your consent to a search of your person, vehicle, or home? What rights do you have when you are a suspect? Can you be compelled to go to a police station for an interview? Do you have to give an alibi to the cops, or even answer their questions? What if you are innocent? What if you have been framed and the real perpetrators are organized gangsters? Can your attorney effectively investigate, or are you at the mercy of a flawed police investigation? What if you are a witness to an event involving organized crime? Can you be prosecuted for refusing to be a witness? What choices and options do you have in these scenarios? By the end of this book, you will be the judge and jury as to whether you have a viable social compact with your criminal legal system, and whether you reside in a Police State as opposed to a free society.
